Most of his friends with whom they used to stay were puzzled as to why he was not with them as he used to be especially in the evening hours because he would supply them with alcohol every evening.

However, when it approached evening hours, Mr. Ababo would instead go to the garden and do some farm activities like digging, weeding under his plantations, harvesting ready crops or even grazing animals and bringing them home.

One day, his wife Mrs Agoleru got concerned about Mr. Ababo's unusual behaviour in the evening hours. She warmly welcomed her husband from farming, gave him some water for bathing and then served him supper. On seeing Mr. Ababo seated quietly thinking of how his family would look like in future.

Mrs. Agoleru asked him what the problem was and why he was not going out in the evenings as he used to. Mr. Ababo politely replied that he was minimizing costs of saving money to buy a television set in the near future. Having served and earned enough money from farming. Mr. Ababo finally went to Arua city and bought a huge TV set with all its components which were installed in the sitting room. Their children were all excited because the TV would enable them watch different TV programme such as live matches and events, cartoons and movies from their home.

The neighbour and nearby residents in Ngacu village would also gather and watch live matches from Mr. Ababo's home.
